DAILY NEWS. THURSDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 26, 1865.

England and the Revival of Southern Trade. The rapid revival of trade with the South stimulates the manufacturing districts of England to renewed activity. The London Daily News, of the 2d inst., says:

"The accounts from our manufacturing districts show that the expected revival of the trade with the United States has begun there in earnest. At Manchester an enormous business is being done, both for yarns and cloth. Goods are wanted at once, proposals for the execution of orders in a few weeks being received with extreme impatience by shippers, who prefer to buy available goods at a considerable advance rather than lose the opportunities of an excited market."

"The news quotes from American journals to show how the Southern trade has grown since the war ended, and adds these remarks: "Nor is it only a revival of old relations that is now taking place; for the first time within those thirty years the South, no longer having a 'peculiar institution' to screen and defend, dares to treat the North as one country with itself, and invite its citizens to come with the energy and capital which are so much needed here. All more enterprising of the Southern States are calling for the advent of Northern men. The civil authorities and the journalists of Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky and Missouri earnestly invite immigration to their respective States, setting forth at length the extraordinary numbers in which the 'new order of things' in those regions presents to industrious and thrifty people. By many of the vessels leaving New York for points on the Southern seaboard, as also by inland modes of conveyance, enterprising artisans, mechanics and laborers leave the North in considerable numbers, in quest of the employment and fortune which are so enthusiastically promised them. There is nothing since Lee's surrender which more strikingly demonstrates the magnitude of the revolution which has passed over the public than this flow of immigration into States which very lately were practically closed to the free emigrant."

ONE OF THE BOYS.—The Long Branch correspondent of the New York Times thus chronicles the feats of a marvelous boy who sat opposite him at the table:

I was greatly amused at dinner by an exhibition of the peculiarities of a shoddy family. The hotel register showed the name of Albert in connection with this group. I do not assert. I scorn registers. That the head of this family was entitled by divine right to the name of Eccles T. Shoddy, I do assert. He was well enough shodded his food into his mouth with a knife, it is true; but so does any honest man. Mrs. Shoddy was resplendent with diamonds, and her stubby red fingers glittered with many colored jewels; and she was fat, and not fair, and past forty. But with neither of these was I "wrapt up." It was with "that boy." Between the parents he sat directly opposite me at the table, and I concealed with my napkin the visible struggle going on within me; I trust no one observed it. He was a feeble urchin, with watery-white eyes and a freckled face, and ate his food with the voracity of a starved spaniel, and blinked continually, like a rat in a rain storm. He gobbled, he gnawed, and he clawed. His fingers were in everything alternately within his reach, including his hair, his coffee, and his plate. He scooped knives and forks; or when he did use them it was with the energy of despair. He would seize a lot of fried chicken, and with his teeth, he tossed the rejected part over his shoulder upon the floor. He got butter upon his coat-sleeve and he wiped it upon his pantaloons; he spilled everything within his reach; he thrust his hand behind him to grab the waiter by the coat and give him a order; and when anything was brought him he would scratch his head thoughtfully and stare wildly at it while collecting all his things on the table, and the dessert completely nonplussed him: "Mar, what's that?" he cried, as a gaily colored blanc mange greeted his vision. "That's pudding," "mar what's that?" "Gimme a lot," the young hopeful responded. Only when appealed to, however, did Mrs. Shoddy observe her child; so also Mr. Shoddy. The parental unconsciousness of that child was something almost sublime. He might have stood on his head, I think, and they would not have wavered.

EDGAR POE'S GRAVE.—The impression that Edgar A. Poe's grave cannot be recognized in Baltimore, is corrected by a letter from HENRY HERRING to the American of that city. He says:

"He was buried in his grandfather's (David Poe) lot, near the centre of the graveyard, wherein was buried his grandmother and several others of the family. I furnished a neat mahogany coffin, and Mr. Nelson Poe the hawk and hoarse. Mr. Nelson Poe, Judge Nelson and myself, together with Mr. Charles Suter, the undertaker, were the only persons attending his funeral. Mr. Edgar Allen Poe was the son of the brother (David Poe, Jr.), of my first wife, Eliza Poe, and was adopted by Mr. Allen, of Richmond, on the death of his father and mother in that city. He has a sister, Rosalie Poe, now living, who came to Baltimore a few days ago in very indigent circumstances. She was also an adopted child in the family of Mr. and Mrs. Mackenzie, of Richmond, on the death of her parents."

The Presbyterians are likely to have a further "split" on the subject of slavery. The Louisville Presbytery, at its recent session, adopted "a declaration and testimony," which sets forth that a church which dabbles in radicalism is no longer a true Christian church; and that unless the future General Assembly repeal its former anti-slavery deliverances, the General Assembly and Kentucky must part company. Now, in the Presbyterian Synod at present in session, a series of resolutions condemning that action have been under discussion for several days past. The telegraphic dispatch we published on Saturday stated that they have been voted down by a vote of 102 to 25. That is to say, the Synod (State) stands by the action of the (Louisville) Presbytery. This vote will probably be followed now by the open secession of the majority of the Kentucky Presbyterians from the General Assembly of the United States—a secession which would be impossible if the General Assembly left politics, and especially political abolitionism, alone.

YOU CAN'T OPEN YOUR LIPS, ladies, without revealing whether you use the fragrant SOZODONT or not. No occasion for words. Your teeth and breath speak for you. The lustre and purity imparted to the delicate machinery by that peerless fluid, and the fragrance which from the month cannot be realized by the use of any other article accessible to the human family.

CONNECTICUT was spread over with abolition speeches, in favor of negro suffrage, franked by Sumner and Ames, of Massachusetts. They were "thicker than birds at a shower," but do not seem to have had a very remarkable effect on the public mind.—N. H. Register.
